spring, and summer terms with built-in breaks. In reality, each term contains multiple sub-“periods” add-drop windows, mid-term exam weeks, and grade-submission deadlines that directly affect enrollment status and tuition calculations. A missed add-drop deadline can lock a student into a course load that doesn’t fit their schedule, while an overlooked tuition deadline may trigger late-payment penalties. Recognizing these hidden checkpoints helps students avoid. Registration Opens: Early August for fall, early January for spring, and late May for summer. Early registration secures preferred classes and can reduce the need for late-hour schedule changes. Add-Drop Period: Typically the first week of each term. Dropping a class within this window prevents a “W” on the transcript and avoids unnecessary tuition charges. Tuition Payment Deadline: Usually the Monday following the add-drop period. Paying by this date preserves enrollment status and prevents holds on transcripts and library accounts.
