Travelers looking to stretch every dollar often overlook the tool that can turn a chaotic ticket search into a predictable savings strategy: Southwest Airlines' Low Fare Calendar. By visualizing price fluctuations across weeks and months, the calendar lets budget-focused flyers pinpoint the cheapest days to fly, avoid hidden fees, and lock in discounts before they disappear. Southwest's pricing model is built on simplicity—no hidden taxes, no baggage charges for the first two checked bags, and no seat selection fees. Yet the base fare still ebbs and flows with demand. The Low Fare Calendar aggregates this data, showing a grid of fares for each day of the month. When a traveler compares the calendar to a single-date search, the difference can be as much as $100 or more per round-trip, especially during peak travel periods such as holidays or school breaks. Start by entering flexible dates in the “Month view” on Southwest’s website. The calendar will highlight the least expensive days in a distinct shade. From there: Identify a “sweet spot” window. Look for three to five consecutive days with the lowest fares; these often align with mid-week travel. Cross-check with your itinerary. Ensure your desired destination and any required connections are available on those dates. Set price alerts. If your travel window is flexible, enable alerts for the identified dates; Southwest notifies you when a fare drops below the current low. LEEN'S REFERRAL LINK: LINK TO BLOG ARTICLE: ...
