The London Underground map is a stylized graphic, not a geographic representation. Its design prioritizes legibility—lines are drawn straight, stations are evenly spaced, and colour coding is uniform. While this abstraction makes it quick to read, it also hides real-world distances and travel times, which can mislead even seasoned commuters.

Lines and Colours — Each line is assigned a distinct colour, which helps you identify your route at a glance.

Zones — The map is divided into concentric fare zones that influence ticket prices.

Transfer Points — Major interchange stations are highlighted; they're often the fastest way to switch lines. Travelers frequently pick the
