Philadelphia, Harrisburg, and Pittsburgh courts publish opinions and rule changes on separate platforms. In addition, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court frequently issues advisory opinions that cascade down to the Commonwealth and Superior Courts. A typical mistake is relying on a single source—often a generic legal news site—that may lag behind the official releases by days or even weeks. The result is outdated case law citations, missed filing deadlines, and, for litigants, an uneven playing field. Relying on manual checks. Scrolling the court's docket once a week sounds simple, but the sheer volume of filings makes it easy to overlook critical updates. Using only free aggregators. Free services often pull data from secondary sources and filter out lesser-known decisions, which can include the very rulings you
